From the Pianist & Visual Artist

“To evoke in oneself a feeling one has once experienced, and having evoked it in oneself, then, by means of movements, lines, colors, sounds, or forms expressed in words, so to transmit that feeling that others may experience the same feeling - this is the activity of art.” From Leo Tolstoy’s What is Art?

Music is by and large conceived, executed and experienced through complex filters of auditory comprehension. Frequency, rhythm and vibration alter brainwaves and awaken emotions present at the core of every human being.

Art, in all of its varied disciplines, finds its creative origins in these emotional depths. The visual art experience is less immediate in altering the state of mind than the auditory experience. Both, however, share the ability to awaken, grip and provoke emotion.

The direct link between music, visual art, architecture and all expressions of creative artistry is found in overlapping components of their structural composition; such as balance, rhythm, proportion and harmony. All share the same source of creation, and the individual expression gives the emotional identity to the work.

The process of composition in music is no different from the process of composition in visual art. The work, usually conceived by an emotionally induced idea, is given an overall structure of proportion, color, rhythm, texture or the lack thereof. What sets a superior composition apart from a lesser one lies within the formulation of the specific combinations, which determines the scientific and emotional results.

As a pianist, musician and visual artist, I perceive music through the vivid experience of imagery. Since my early introduction to music, sounds and keys presented themselves in color and texture. This direct link between physical emotion through sound waves and visual experience inevitably inspired me to express myself in both media. To me, these are inextricably linked on the same plane.

The paintings created for this program derived their inspiration and method from auditory impressions of the music presented here, while the keyboard improvisations are rooted in the same method of impression of color and texture. Each work represents emotional distinction in color referencing the poetry, lyrics and emotional titles of the musical themes. Both the music and the visual art embody impression and expression in simultaneous reflection.

- Stef-Albert Bothma
