Notes ON THE PROGRAM

KARL JENKINS  Palladio
Born: February 17, 1944, Neath, Wales, United Kingdom

Palladio was inspired by the 16th-century Italian architect Andrea Palladio, whose work embodies the renaissance celebration of harmony and order. Two of Palladio's hallmarks are mathematical harmony and architectural elements borrowed from classical antiquity, a philosophy which Karl Jenkins feels reflects his approach to composition.

KARL JENKINS  Sacred Songs (Selections)
"Ave Verum" from Stabat Mater

Stabat Mater is a 13th-century Roman Catholic poem attributed to Jacopone da Todi. Its title is an abbreviation of the first line, Stabat Mater dolorosa ("the sorrowful mother was standing"). This text, one of the most powerful and immediate of medieval poems, meditates on the suffering of Mary, Jesus Christ's mother, during his crucifixion.

It has been set to music by many composers, among them Haydn, Dvořák, Vivaldi, Rossini, Pergolesi, Gounod, Penderecki, Poulenc, Szymanowski, Alessandro Scarlatti, Domenico Scarlatti, and Verdi.

I have set six texts that lie outside the original poem; these include a choral arrangement of the Ave Verum that I originally composed for Bryn Terfel.

—Note by Karl Jenkins

Text of "Ave Verum"

Ave verum corpus natum
De Maria Virgine.
Vere passum, immolatum
In cruce pro homine.
Cujus latus perforatum
Fluxit aqua et sanguine.
Esto nobis prægustatum
Mortis in examine.
Jesu dulcis! Jesu pie,
Fili Mariae.
Amen.

Hail, true body,
Born of the Virgin Mary,
Truly suffered, sacrificed
On the cross for mankind,
Whose pierced side
Flowed with water and blood,
Be for us a foretaste
In the trial of death.
Sweet Jesus! Blessed Jesus,
Son of Mary.
Amen.
“Benedictus” from The Armed Man: A Mass For Peace

“Benedictus” is an excerpt from The Armed Man: A Mass For Peace, a special millennial commission from the Royal Armouries and the latest in a six century-old tradition of “Armed Man” masses that take the 15th-century French song “L’homme armé” as their starting point. The theme that the armed man must be feared, which is the message of the song, seemed painfully relevant to the 20th century, and so the idea was born to commission a modern “Armed Man Mass.”

“Benedictus” follows the Agnus Dei, which, with its lyrical chorale theme, reminds us of Christ’s ultimate sacrifice. “Benedictus” heals those wounds in its slow and stately affirmation of faith and leads us to the final, positive climax of the work.

The Armed Man: A Mass For Peace received its world premiere in April 2000 at London’s Royal Albert Hall. In a rapturous performance, by turns visceral and ethereal, the mass was “a fire bomb of orchestral and human voices” (the London Times) that drew “prolonged shouts of approval from the audience” (the Independent).

Text of “Benedictus”

Benedictus qui venit in nomine Domini.

Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.

Hosanna in excelsis.

Hosanna in the Highest.

KARL JENKINS Euphonium Concerto (New York Premiere)

The euphonium has, for many years, been associated with the world of brass and traditional marching bands rather than that of the symphony orchestra and concert hall. Indeed, it is such a rare visitor to the concert hall that there will be some who might even be unsure as to exactly what a euphonium is. Within brass bands it plays a central role and is often referred to as the cello of the band on account of its similarity in register to its stringed counterpart. In the last five years or so, these perceptions have begun to change, largely due to the vision of one man—the young player David Childs who, although not even yet 30, has done much to change our view of the instrument and develop for it a new character in fitting with the 21st century. A major part of his campaign to win the euphonium new audiences has been to commission new pieces for it, one of the most important of which was Alun Hoddinott’s concerto, heard by an enthusiastic audience at the BBC Proms in 2004. With Karl Jenkins’ Euphonium Concerto, David Childs now adds a further work by a major composer to the instrument’s repertoire.

“Finding major composers willing to write for the instrument is the challenge,” said Childs in an interview. “Karl’s work is very listenable, very virtuosic, typical of his style. I’m sure it will appeal to a broad musical population, which is the audience I’m trying to reach.” The concerto was commissioned by Euphonium Foundation UK, an organization set up by Childs devoted to...
commissioning new and diverse repertoire and developing an understanding of the euphonium.

In bringing the instrument before a wider audience, few composers are more qualified to reach out to music lovers than Swansea-born Karl Jenkins. “It’s been a privilege to write a concerto for such a virtuoso performer,” says Jenkins. “I’ve known David for a few years and was hoping this opportunity would happen. As is my wont, I’ve endeavored to make the concerto somewhat quirky and “off the wall.”

The first movement, The Juggler, immediately establishes a sense of fun, graphically bringing to mind both the ease of movement and lolling suspense of the juggler’s art. The second movement, Romanza, is an unashamedly lyrical outpouring for the soloist, initially accompanied by strings and, later, the full orchestra. The third movement—“It takes two…”—is a sultry tango-like melody with a particularly striking ending where the soloist both sings and plays the euphonium simultaneously. A Troika? Tidy!, a galloping rhythm in the orchestra joined by the soloist in the lowest register of the instrument in a troika (a traditional Russian dance which imitates the prancing of horses). A slow romantic episode briefly interrupts the music’s joie de vivre, out of which the soloist emerges with a cadenza of great brilliance (accompanied by two sleigh bells) leading to the Concerto’s rousing conclusion.

ARWEL HUGHES Dewi Sant
Born: August 25, 1909, Rhosllanerchrugog, Wales, United Kingdom
Died: September 23, 1988, Cardiff, Wales, United Kingdom

The Welsh composer Arwel Hughes won the special affection of his compatriots as much for his personal qualities as for his considerable musical attainments. His progress from his origins as the tenth child of a miner to become head of music at BBC Wales was in itself an achievement admired in a country which has traditionally accorded scant respect to mere commercial or political success.

Hughes was born into a poor but close-knit and musically active community, Rhosllanerchrugog, a mining village near Wrexham in North Wales. His talent, largely nurtured by a musical elder brother, gained him admission to the Royal College of Music as a composition student. There he studied with Gordon Jacob, C. H. Kitson, Gustav Holst and, above all, Vaughan Williams, whose staunch admirer he remained for the rest of his life.

Before entering on a BBC career during the war years, Arwel Hughes served terms as an organist and choirmaster, most notably at an Oxford high anglican church. By his own admission, the close contact with traditional Latin liturgy and the rituals of the western church had a marked effect on his musical style. Various duties in the broadcasting studios, as arranger, conductor, producer and auditioner, as well as his active involvement in the National and International Eisteddfodau (competitive cultural festivals), left little time for original composition. Nevertheless he produced two operas, a symphony, three string quartets, a mass, and much other choral and orchestral music.
The oratorio Dewi Sant, Arwel Hughes’ first large-scale work of this kind, was commissioned by the Arts Council of Great Britain as part of the Welsh contribution to the celebrations of the Festival of Britain in 1951.

The choice of Wales’ patron saint as the subject was an appropriate one, and the work duly received its first performance, conducted by the composer, in the presence of royalty HRH Princess Marina, Duchess of Kent at the national shrine, St. David’s Cathedral in Pembrokeshire on July 12. The chosen librettist was a close friend and colleague at the BBC, the writer and poet Aneurin Talfan Davies, who devised a Welsh text based on the traditional life of the saint. The main source of this is the 11th-century Latin Vita, written by Rhygyfarch (himself a son of a bishop of St. David’s) some six centuries after Dewi’s lifetime (c. 520–588 AD), which though purporting to be based on ancient manuscripts, contains much legendary and other material. Above all, it aims to extol the virtues of the saint, and by association, the independent monastic see he founded in the face of imminent danger of its abolition by the invading Normans and their aggressive and greedy clerics. Although the see was forced to submit to the authority of Canterbury, and the Celtic church was compulsorily reformed, the cult of David remained strong and widespread, and the day of his death, March first, was celebrated as a calendar feast-day by central decree. (Indeed, two pilgrimages to his shrine were officially considered equal to one to Rome.)

The clear and authentic voice of Dewi, the monastic reformer and ascetic (“The Waterman”), the prayerful mystic, and eloquent preacher who stood firm in the face of pagan opposition and intrigue, but above all the loving father to his people, seems in fact to pierce the mists of time and his traditional apotheosis. These elements, rather than extraneous narrative, are highlighted in the libretto, which effectively celebrates the personality and holiness of Dewi, and, with his final exhortation to the faithful, emphasizes his legacy to his people.

This is well suited to Hughes’ music, which in essence is lyrical and contemplative, underpinned by a coloristic use of harmony, with the dramatic elements subordinated to an overall devotional impetus. If it could be said that, two decades previously Walton’s Belshazzar’s Feast had dragged English choristers firmly into the 20th century, then Dewi Sant can be held to have more gently nudged their equally hidebound Welsh counterparts in the same direction.

Like his teacher Vaughan Williams, Hughes was well aware of the needs and limitations of amateur performers, and with his professional experience knew exactly how far they could then be stretched in the musical art of the possible.

Moreover, a modern but colorful and mellifluous work, cast in the traditional festive mold, with soloists, chorus, and orchestra, responded to a special need in the last years of post-war austerity. It has the charm and allure of a musical stained-glass window depicting a mediaeval scene, but in a contemporary manner.

The oratorio received a number of performances following its premiere, and has maintained a certain place in the Welsh choral repertoire.
Text of Dewi Sant

Chorus
Praise the Lord for all his Saints,
Praise the Lord for David our Patron;
Praise him, Praise ye the Lord.
Praise the Lord for his holy fame,
Praise the Lord for the tongue of flame,
with zeal consuming the tares of Satan,
Praise the Lord.
Praise the Lord our God for his long endurance.
Praise the Lord for his pain and penance,
Praise the Lord our God for his holy zeal,
for the words that heal.
Praise the Lord for all his Saints,
Praise the Lord with joyful singing.
For his lowly bearing in perilous hour, a mighty tow’r of faith.
Praise the Lord for all his Saints.
Praise the Lord, for David our patron,
Praise him Praise the Lord.

Soprano
Who’ll bring his sickle to the yellowing wheat and his scythe to the meadow at morn?
Who’ll come to burn the tares that choketh the rip’ning corn?
The meadows are ripe for the harvest tide,
Our faithful Patrick give ear,
The sheaves in the meadow with longing bend low for the sheltering barns of God.
The night is far spent and now the day of toil and labour draws nigh.
Come hither, Patrick, to the fields of the Faith,
Come lead us, come Patrick, we cry.

Tenor
And Patrick came to Vallis Rosina, and promised there to serve his master,
Behold an Angel came to him and said:

Soprano
“Our God hath not disposed this place for thee,
But for a son not yet delivered, nor be born until 30 years are past.
Be not sad, be joyful, Patrick, giv’n to thee em’rald isle across the sea,
And to these people thou shalt be Saint, apostle of Christ, God hath ordained.”

Tenor
Then was Patrick’s mind appeased, and straight-way he crossed to Ireland.
After 30 years were over, from this time, a son was born to Non, the Holy maiden.
Before he was born, Non came to the Cathedral to hear Gildas there proclaiming,
And then was Gildas struck dumb before Non and her unborn child.
And he prophesied about him, O maid, the son thou shalt deliver
O'er Cymry's saints shall be the ruler,
To reign supreme till judgement day,
Though poor his way, yet full of grace and power and dignity and honour.

Semi-Chorus
As drops the gentle dove to earth
So there shall fall upon him the ancient mantle of the Faith;
And wisdom so becoming.
As sweet as honey shall his voice
Resound through hill and valley;
And whiter than the virgin snow shall be his life, and holy.

Tenor
And David and his disciples came down to Vallis Rosina,
And Boia espied a fire in the glen.

Chorus
Fire has been kindled in Vallis Rosina,
And its smoke encircles our whole island;
Token sure of mighty David,
David waterman! Who doth fear him and his cold religion;
Who now fears these craven weaklings,
Their bread and water,
Their cruel fasts their dry bread and water,
Cowards! Banish their Faith so cold.

Baritone
Boia, my son, O, why wilt thou so mock thy God
And turn His anger now against thee?
My son, give ear.
The God who fashioned sun and moon and sky,
And measured the starry heav’n’s with this span.
He gave His only son a bloody ransom.
His only Son who will reign o’er his Kingdom,
And o’er this Holy Isle.
O bow ye all and take his light and easy
yoke upon you,
And let your souls receive the blessing,
That the world and all its pleasures cannot ever offer.
In Cymru’s vineyard the tree was planted;
Fed were its roots with the blood of the martyrs.
Beneath its bloody branch is shelter.
Find refuge and rest in the arms of our Saviour,
For on this precious tree doth grow the leaves to heal the nation’s woe.

Tenor
And Boia bowed to the yoke, and in Vallis Rosina the Saintly David built his Holy House.
And there he laboured and bore his witness, custodian of the Faith
A Prince o’er the saints of this Island,
A help to the needy and friend to the lonely,
A father to the faithful, A terror to all heretics;
His gentle correction. and deeds of compassion,
O, Prince of the Faith, O, Prince of the Faith.
And later, with David advanced in years,
there came upon him longing to enter the realm of glory,
To share with blessed saints the Glory of Jesus his Beloved.

Baritone
When wilt Thou come, Reedemer?
When wilt Thou come, my Lord?
When wilt Thou come Redeemer, and take me to Thy bosom
O weary my heart with longing for Thy face,
O blessed Lord, let me now depart from earthly toil:
To my Redeemer and rest for ever more with Thee.

Female-Chorus
Come hither, David, to light and glory:
From penance and fasting,
Come hither to light and glory.

Soprano
Now be prepared, David, Now be prepared,
And know ye disciples that on the first of March comes Jesus, by heav’nly hosts escorted
To take your father from this most wicked world to where there shall be glory eternal;
Seated on thrones of everlasting glory, for ever.

Female Semi-Chorus
Come hither, David, to light and glory
From Vallis Rosina to praise for ever the Holy Lamb.

Tenor
And on that Sunday stood David at the altar,
And he addressed his people.

Chorus
Kyrie eleison, Christe eleison. Kyrie eleison

Baritone
Benedicat vos omnipotens Deus, Pater, et
Filius, et Spiritus Sanctus

Chorus
Amen

Baritone
My Lords, brothers and sisters. be ye joyful and keep the Faith

Chorus
Amen

Baritone
Persevere in these, and do these little things
You’ve heard and have witnessed of me;
And straightway I shall go the way my fathers trod,
And fare ye well.

Chorus
Amen

Baritone
Benedicat vos omnipotens Deus, Pater, et
Filius, et Spiritus Sanctus
Chorus
Amen

Tenor
From Sunday to Wednesday, after the visit of the angel,
They tasted neither food nor drink, but entreated in sadness.
The first of March the City was filled with hosts of angels and heav'nly music and perfume;
And came Jesus, and with him angelic hosts, And with a great rejoicing, and glory and honour.

Chorus
After long and faithful fasting,
After suffer'ring and striving,
After patient long endurance,
After pain and bitter penance,
He taketh our Saint David to the land of light,
The land of life immortal
And light and praise eternal,
Abode of angels and of Archangels,
Cherubim and Seraphim,
And King of Kings forever, Amen.

Tenor
Lord, have mercy.
Christ, have mercy.

Chorus
Eternal rest grant unto them, O Lord,
And let perpetual light shine upon them.

Chorus
David, O blessed David, plead for us now, Pray for us, O pray for our land, plead now for our land.
THE MUSIC TRADITION OF WALES

Karl Jenkins has inherited a long and rich musical heritage from his native Wales, often referred to as the “Land of Song.”

The Welsh national instrument is the harp, and the triple harp is uniquely Welsh, an example of which can be seen in the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York. Cerdd dant is an ancient tradition in which poetry is sung to one tune against the accompaniment of a harp to a different tune. Catrin Finch is acknowledged as one of the world’s finest harpists and premiered Jenkins’ Over the Stone, a concerto commissioned by HRH The Prince of Wales when Finch was the royal harpist.

Among the many influences on Karl Jenkins’ work are the male voice choir and brass band traditions, both of which developed during the industrialization of Wales in the 19th and early 20th centuries. Both musical traditions travelled with the Welsh as they emigrated to find work overseas—particularly in America. The Anthracite Male Chorus of Scranton, Pennsylvania, travelled to Wales in 1928 and won the coveted prize for best choir at the Welsh National Eisteddfod presided over on that day by David Lloyd George. The Cory Band from South Wales, directed by Dr. Robert Childs, are currently world champions. Robert Childs’ son, virtuoso euphonium player David Childs, plays Jenkins’ concerto, written for him, at tonight’s concert. There have been several eminent Welsh males voice choirs—Morriston Orpheus, Treorchy, Pendyrus, Pontardulais to mention a few—and more recently, Only Men Aloud, winner of the BBC’s highly-popular Last Choir Standing show.

Other important facets of Welsh musical life worth mentioning are congregational hymn singing that emerged from the Methodist revival of the 18th century. William Williams, Pantycelyn, is generally acknowledged as Wales’ most important hymn writer. The National Youth Orchestra of Wales, for which Jenkins played the oboe as a child, is the oldest national youth orchestra in the world.

The Welsh National Opera (WNO), now over 60 years old, takes world-class opera to thousands of people throughout the United Kingdom, and internationally through co-productions with overseas companies. Bryn Terfel started his illustrious career with the WNO and is now one of the most sought-after bass-baritones in the world, appearing regularly at Carnegie Hall and the Metropolitan Opera here in New York. Another current star is soprano and Grammy winner Rebecca Evans.

Welsh rock music has recently taken off with the chart successes of bands including Manic Street Preachers, Catatonia (featuring Cerys Matthews), and the Stereophonics. Welsh perennials such as Sir Tom Jones and Dame Shirley Bassey have retained their popularity worldwide.

The Welsh musical tradition can be experienced by the visitor to Wales in a number of festivals held throughout the year such as the National Eisteddfod, where, in recent years, Jenkins has conducted his works The Armed Man: A Mass for Peace and Dewi Sant; the International Eisteddfod, where in 2010 Jenkins will conduct his The Armed Man: A Mass for Peace; the BBC Singer of the World; Brecon Jazz; Bryn Terfel’s Faenol festival and many more.
