Notes on the Program
by Joseph & Elizabeth Kahn

Messiah
GEORGE FRIDERIC HANDEL (1685–1759)
Re-Orchestrated for full symphony orchestra by Eugene Goossens (1893–1962)

Messiah is a collection of biblical extracts compiled as a complement and response to the story of Christ’s incarnation, death and resurrection. There are no dramatic characters, the soloists adopt a primarily prophetic voice and the chorus responds as a kind of universal congregation.

The first part of Messiah deals primarily with the prophecies of Christ’s birth, mainly from the Book of Isaiah, and more meditative psalm texts. The texts are all optimistic, focusing on redemption through acceptance of a merciful and gentle savior. The actual Christmas story is told only in the three central numbers, the chorus “For unto us a child is born,” the recitative “There were shepherds abiding in the fields,” and the chorus “Glory to God,” in which the soprano soloist serves as “Evangelist” and the chorus as “Mankind” and the Heavenly Host respectively.

Part Two is distinct from the Passion oratorios in that it does not tell the story of the crucifixion but is rather a meditation on Christ’s death and mankind’s need for redemption. Once again, the texts are taken primarily from the Hebrew Scriptures, in which the events of Christ’s sacrifice are believed to be anticipated. Part Two ends with the “Hallelujah” chorus, celebrating the redemption of man rather than the tragedy of Christ’s death. Equally non-dramatic is Part Three, a musical consideration of the significance for mankind of the resurrection.

Handel composed Messiah in a little over three weeks, typically dipping into earlier compositions when it suited his taste and probably his schedule: “And He shall purify,” “For unto us a child is born” and “His yoke is easy” were originally Italian secular cantatas for two voices. Remnants of moribund opera seria style can be heard in the da capo aria “Rejoice greatly,” but the repeat of the first part is by no means exact, driving to an emotional and musical climax that ends the aria. Another distinction in this aria is that Handel notated the ornamentation instead of allowing the singer carte blanche to improvise, as was the custom with the castrati who dominated the operatic stage.
Always attentive to matching words and music, Handel, like Bach, frequently used tone painting to accentuate important textual elements: Note the trills on the word “shake” in the bass recitative “Thus saith the Lord” and the twisting chromatic vocal line in the bass aria to portray “The people that walked in darkness.” On the other hand, note how difficult it is for the chorus to sing the word “easy” in “His yoke is easy.” The instrumental “Pastoral symphony” portrays the shepherds through the use of the drone in the bass, representing a simple rural bagpipe and the lilting rhythm of traditional Italian folk music.

Messiah was commissioned by the Lord Lieutenant of Dublin and was an enormous success at its premiere performance in 1742, but it fell flat the same year in London. Only after it had been revised and presented in concert for the benefit of the Foundling Hospital in London (which continued to make over £600 at each of its annual benefit performances) did it take off on the way to its current popularity. But nothing boosted the work so much as its adoption every Christmas by traditional English civic choral societies, in which “casts of thousands” continue to belt out the choruses that at its premiere comprised only 33 instrumentalists and 32 singers.

About this Orchestration

Handel’s original modest orchestration did not remain pristine for long. Handel himself had performed it using an enlarged orchestra. Mozart and various others have reorchestrated it for their own times and orchestral forces. In 1959 conductor Sir Thomas Beecham (1879–1961), nearing the end of his career, decided that he wanted to conduct and record Handel’s Messiah one more time, taking advantage of the full force of his Royal Philharmonic Orchestra. He hired conductor and composer Eugene Goossens (1893–1962) for £1,000 (a tidy sum at the time) to do the re-orchestration, explaining reasonably that over the years Messiah had played to larger and larger houses, and that proportionately larger forces were needed to push the sound out.

Handel’s original orchestra consisted of 2 oboes, 2 clarinets, 2 trumpets, timpani, continuo and strings. In Goossens’ hands, this became: 3 flutes (piccolo), 4 oboes (English horn), 2 clarinets (bass clarinet), 2 bassoons, contrabassoon, 4 horns, 2 trumpets, 3 trombones, tuba, timpani, 3 percussionists (including cymbals), harp and strings. Goossens also omitted several movements from the original orchestration Beecham recorded the new version in 1959 with great success (It is still available on CD). But then the story gets murky. After the conductor’s death, Lady Beecham—the Royal Philharmonic’s former telephone operator who was 57 years Beecham’s junior and whom he married in 1959—became the guardian of all her husband’s manuscripts and discouraged attempts to perform the arranged Messiah or even to allow an examination of the score. In fact she claimed that Goossens’ work was unacceptable to her husband and that he had been obliged to “re-re-orchestrate” it himself with the help of a member of the orchestra and had actually used “his own” version for the recording. That claim was, in fact, stated in the insert when the recording was reissued on CD in 1992. Finally, in the early 1990s, Lady Beecham sold her husband’s manuscript collection to Sheffield University where it became possible to examine the score Beecham had used for the recording. It was pure Goossens with only a few minor alterations.

Goossens’ Messiah was not performed again in Britain until 1999. DCINY presented the Lincoln Center premiere of this orchestration on November 27, 2011, under the baton of Jonathan Griffith and the Distinguished Concerts Orchestra.
